I Dare . . Say . .

Wherein We Look at a Sweet Procession

By FLORENCE FISHER PARRY

IN THE early morning, as I sit here in the window and write my column for the day, a procession streams by, a procession of girls, for I am between two schools. Private schools they are, and from kindergarten up to "college entrance" the various ages pass by this window, on their way to school. Most of them wear uniforms, with skirts a bit below the knee, and white shirtwaists with prim collars and cuffs. Their shoes are for the most part "sensible." I believe it is a school requirement. And under the straight lines of their pleated uniforms their figures are like reeds.

Mrs. Parry

Their heads are for the most part bare, and fine inquiring foreheads show below plainly-dressed hair. And they throw back their heads in the sun and laugh and chatter along, sweet laggards, books under their arms.

I see them every day, these girls, I look out at them from my typewriter and I smile cosily. Why, it's quite plain there's nothing wrong with youth, just see how schoolgirly it is, how clear, how clear, its eyes are!

Different on Saturday

NOW THIS is Saturday as I write this, it is not a school-day. The uniforms are hanging in dark closets, gladly discarded for the day, the flat shoes are kicked out of sight. The hair, so glinty and dangly in the sun, is being glued and pressed into painful waves, eyebrows are being "plucked" and dark unhealthy stains of red are being applied to gothic fingernails. This afternoon it will be a talkie, I Dare Say, and you can depend upon it, if there's a "Dance Fools Dance," or an "Illicit" showing, that will be their choice. Oh, both good pictures, yes, well-acted and adult. But in the one a juvenile "party" suddenly decides that it wants to go in swimming. There are no bathing suits it is remembered. . . . Oh, well . . . what of that? . . . they strip, strip off their transparent "shorts," these boys and girls, and plunge in anyway. Why, that's nothing! implies the picture.

And in the other picture "Illicit," (I mention these two which come to mind, for they are typical) the doctrine of trial marriage is advanced persuasively and lightly, to the accompaniment of social amenities which require Someone to be offering Someone a drink in every scene. That too, is nothing! A drink? Why not? . . . it's done by Everyone, don't the movies prove it? so they say, these youngsters. . . . They take their movies seriously, remember.

And Dancing Nowadays

WELL, FROM the talkie ("my dear, HOW do you suppose they make their hair platinum? and did you notice how tight Barbara Stanwyck's skirt was right under the hips?") they go for tea somewhere, and see at every table ashes smeared into the melting ice-cream ("you don't smoke? My dear! How antiquated!") and then home just in time to wait until their elders have their cocktails before dinner. ("It's lots of fun to taste what's left, my dear. What? You haven't ever?")

And this evening—for it is Saturday—as I write—what?

Have you attended lately, a party of youngsters?

Then you have asked yourself, I Dare Say, as I have:

WHAT IS THIS THING CALLED DANCING!

Looking Like Kangaroos

YOU HAVE seen it? You have seen what they are doing, what's all the rage, what all young people are aspiring to affect?

I don't know what it's called. But I do know this. It ISN'T dancing.

To perpetrate it, the young man must put himself into the attitude of a twisted steel beam, upon which his Languishing Lydia drapes herself, or heaves herself as the case may be, like a kangaroo that's lost its balance and is hanging by the neck on the nearest support.

The female stance is that of a humped-up question mark with two bulges instead of one—one at the shoulders and one down further. One shoulder must be in a position of complete dislocation, hunched up to the level of the chin, which reposes on the collar bone of the male support.

In order to preserve this attitude against imminent peril of collapse, a strangle hold must be taken by both partners, a strangle hold around the neck and upper shoulders which serves to clamp the necks and heads together, thus leaving their lower extremities free to engage in acrobatics which passeth description.

They Are in Elysia

IT IS PLAIN to see, from their innocent faces glazed with ecstasy, that they haven't the remotest idea how ungodly they look. Judging from their expressions, they are swimming in Elysia. The moment, in fact, that they begin their undulating contortions, they assume the sick look of moon-calves, from which they are not freed until the music stops, and they unwrap themselves—or should I say, unrivet themselves.

Then the orchestra strikes up another hypnotic note. In a flash they are contorted again from straight, graceful young things, into the torturous posture of dying calves. And we on the side-lines find ourselves offering up a passionate petition:

"Oh, if they could only take a look at themselves and see how barbarous and grotesque they look!" And we follow it with another prayerful sigh:

"Oh, come Monday! Come school again, and straight free bodies in uniform loitering in groups at recess time, hair flying in the sun!"

PASTOR HITS DEATH PENALTY AS CRIME CURE

Rev. Tinsley Declares Society Has Not Benefited By Killing Irene

REV. HANNA SCORES THIRD DEGREE HERE

Congregation Adopts Resolution Asking Clark to Stop Method

"The execution of Irene Schroeder, as far as anyone can see, has not benefited society," Rev. C. W. Tinsley asserted at Knoxville Methodist Episcopal Church last night.

"Society killed Irene Schroeder," Rev. Tinsley said. "It has the right to require the lives of those who have murdered; just as it has the right to send boys to war to be killed.

"But it is not a question of the right—it is a question of what is best for society and the individual," he said.

"The death penalty does not deter crime and murder. The states that do not have the death penalty do not have any more murders than the states that do," he declared.

"Certain and speedy conviction," the pastor said, "will deter crime." As a permanent remedy he gave—"better homes, better mothers and a better public attitude toward these things."

Hits Third Degree Methods

At Knoxville Christian Church, Rev. W. H. Hanna devoted his evening sermon to a discussion and denunciation of "third degree" methods, which he said, were used by Pittsburgh police in getting confessions from suspects.

Rev. Hanna told how the Apostle Paul had escaped the whipping post in Jerusalem by announcing his Roman citizenship to the soldiers who had captured him.

"It does not mean so much today in Pittsburgh to be an American citizen as it did in Jerusalem to be a Roman citizen," Rev. Hanna said.

"Declaration of American citizenship will not save a man from being beaten and thumped in Pittsburgh police stations," the speaker declared.

After the sermon was finished the congregation adopted a resolution calling upon Safety Director Clark and Superintendent of Police Walsh to forbid police using "third degree" methods.

'The Unpardonable Sin'

"The Unpardonable Sin" was discussed by Rev. Ralph K. Merker, pastor of Overbrook Presbyterian Church.

"Nothing will save a man who will not be saved," Rev. Merker explained. The unpardonables, he said, are those who have gone so far in sin, indifferent to pleadings of friends and Scriptures, that they reach the stage where it is impossible for them to fulfill the conditions of pardon.

Dr. John Ray Ewers compared "European Education and American Education" at East End Christian Church.

"America is for mass production in education and industry," he said. "If a professor can get 100 in his class he is considered better than if he has 10.

"In England, under the tutor system, one Fellow may have 10 or 15 men. He lives with them, or they report to him. He advises them.

"Oxford Turns Out Gentlemen."

"Oxford turns out gentlemen—men of culture. They have become gentlemen through association with a man of this type.

"America," he concluded, "does not seem to take much interest in bringing out the talent of the student."

"Respectability" was discussed by Rev. George Taylor, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Wilkinsburg.

"It is not enough to be merely respectable," Rev. Taylor said. "Respectability is merely adhering to a code of ethics, or custom, but the Christian life is stimulated by a motive power from within.

"A man may conform to the customs of a place without being generous or kind or even good," he said.

Defend Modern Church

"What's Right With the Church?" was Rev. C. B. Wible's topic at Mt. Washington Presbyterian Church, and "What Is the Matter With the Church?" was Dr. W. W. T. Duncan's subject at Emory Methodist Episcopal Church. Both sermons defended the modern church.

"The church is right in emphasizing more and more the work among children and young folks," Rev. Wible said. "This is in line with the spirit of Christ.

Dr. Duncan pointed out some of the weak points in the arguments in some of the letters submitted in The Pittsburgh Press' recent effort to find out what its readers thought about the modern church. He said:

"One writer speaks of 200 different denominations in Protestantism. This is a common error. There are only five great denominational families. These embrace practically all of Protestantism.

"Another intimates that there are no poor in the church—that it is wholly an organization of the rich. Well, if the rich are maintaining the church they are certainly not as a whole contributing very largely. In one of the greatest churches of this state 75 per cent of the contributors give 25 cents a week and less. These are not the gifts of the rich.

"The churches erected and endowed by millionaires are so few that they receive wide publicity. The vast majority are maintained by large numbers who have only moderate means."

Mrs. Pinchot in City

Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, wife of the Governor, was in Pittsburgh briefly this morning en route to New Castle and Slippery Rock where she is scheduled to address meetings of club women.

Dolly Gann—Second Lady Of The Land

Kindly Matron of Kansas Never Lets Them Forget It—Her Social Battle With Alice Longworth Is Curtis' Story Given to Reporters and Not the Result of Snooping News Writers—This Is the First of a Series Telling What Makes Washington Names Tick in Headlines

By DOUGLAS GILBERT
Scripps-Howard Staff Writer
Copyright, 1931, for The Press

DOLLY CURTIS GANN sports the social mantilla she wears as second lady of the land like a true Kansan—atilt, cocky as the headdress of her vice presidential half brother's Kawchief ancestry. She wears it, as every one knows, by ambassadorial fiat. And, be it added, with an interesting grace.

Never particularly interested in Washington's social whirl heretofore, Dolly rode into the round of receptions on a ballot—the election of Charles Curtis to the presidency of the Senate—and at once began to add to the truffling trifles of the capital's season a homey benison, if slightly belligerent. For the kindly, ample Mrs. Edward Everett Gann (as she prefers to be known) has all the amenities of a Kansas matron—sunny, irresistible, expansive as her native acreage. Washington should be grateful for her leavening touch.

Mrs. Dolly Curtis Gann

As a matter of fact, the snooty wearers of the capital's brass, brocade and tinsel are not. Mrs. Gann is regarded by many of the paraders as something of an upstart. Not long ago she decided to give an open house for the Kansas delegation in the Congress and blithefully had the invitations drawn up to read "Mrs. Edward Everett Gann and Mrs. Arthur Capper." . . .

It was a small matter as World Courts and Wilson Leagues and drouth relief and bonus bills go. But the Senatorial ladies are as jealous as their stuffed shirt husbands of their prerogatives. Mrs. Gann, if I understand the social distinctions of the capital, is rather by courtesy a member of the Senate Ladies Luncheon Club, and her invitation, in which she placed her name first, before the seniority of Mrs. Capper, wife to the Kansas Senator, amounted to usurpation.

• • •

"DOLLY, you can't do that, my dear," said Mrs. Capper. "I don't care a fig about it for myself, but there will be talk."

There was, and plenty, for the irrepressible Dolly sent them out as they came from the engraver. It is this "me first" attitude of hers that amuses some and irks more.

Now, in a society whose deeper, sociological perception has all the authority of Mrs. Doran's fruit-juice cocktails, Dolly would be quite the superficial center or sewing circle gossip in the Northwest spoke that is the wheel of Washington. They take her seriously the wrong way. They do not, as they should, relish her.

Here she has the upper hand. The "Topeka Terror" relishes herself and her role, make no mistake about that. It is delightful to see her expand; to observe her reactions; note her responses, as she presides, an ample, amiable, semi-shrewd preceptress of Washington's social sphere.

Maybe a bit beyond 50, Mrs. Gann is just rounding into her stride. And is enjoying her "stepping out." Her face, the kindly visage of a childless woman yearning to extol a son, beams with good nature. You thoroughly enjoy her own enjoyment of herself. To get her full flavor you must view her with detachment not too closely allied to amusement. There is a good deal of the pristine prairie in this woman. She is the apotheosis of the back porch and the call to dinner. She imparts a gusto; her heartiness is real; her zest authentic as the wind-blown wheat of Shawnee County.

• • •

SHE says she gets many letters addressed "in care the White House," and imparts this information with a smiling significance; tossing it off honestly for whatever it may be worth. There is no pseudo attempt at dimissal of a casual mistake. Some of the letters are irate demands of a misguided farm-hand constituency, who believe she is responsible for the splendiferous doin's, that she cease her raids on the Treasury necessary to meet their cost. She laughs it off heartily, while quietly filing away the letters.

"You know," Dolly once explained to a friend, "I handle all my correspondence. I have the Mayflower (her hotel) put them through the letter flap of my door and I get out of my bed at 5 a. m., and open them in bed. I get thousands of letters. Just thousands!" . . .

Presently Gann himself comes in, and you view an affable, sturdy, bald headed lawyer, whose deference to his wife is a courtly gesture. Edward Everett Gann is quite content to play up to his wife; at the same time, you gather, being just a bit fed up with the whole thing. A musician, he steers the talk around to "Tristan," and Dolly quits the picture until the Vice President arrives.

"Charlie," as every one knows him, was one of the best liked widowers of the Senate. During the Coolidge regime he was "taken up," and got around himself a good deal. It's no myth about his poker playing ability. Give Charlie an even run of luck and you walk home. He's still popular, but his Vice Presidential "duties," and these include his social activities, are an added responsibility that have become cares. She calls him "Brother," and there is wholehearted meaning in the title.

You must understand this relationship, for it is the key to Dolly's current raison d'entre in Washington society. The whole background has never been revealed. Charlie is about a quarter Kaw Indian. I believe Dolly was an adopted daughter in the household.

• • •

AT ANY rate, when Charlie won his political spurs as a Congressman back in 1893 he brought Dolly to Washington as his secretary, the first woman to hold such a post. Washington 38 years ago was a different town. No dry law bedevilled it, the Capitol bar was in full tilt, and Charlie helped himself to the sturdier, homlier social swing characteristic of a hard-riding jockey rarin' to go.

In the meantime Dolly stayed at the office and kept his political fences mended. While Charlie was out playing poker Dolly took care to keep the electoral home fires burning; answered the appeals for help; staved off the thousand or so applicants for the postmastership at Elk City. She worked hard, and many nights to midnight. She was faithful, shrewd, indispensable.

An affectionate loyalty grew up between them that is unmatched in the capital. This proceeded throughout his Senatorial days, and when the Senator became Vice President Curtis he made no bones about telling official Washington where it got off with regard to Mrs. Gann.

And in no uncertain terms. It was Secretary Kellogg ("Nice-Nellie Kellogg" was his cloak room sobriquet) who first ruled that Dolly take a back seat for the ambassadors. It was thus and so on page this and that in the archives. Ailsa Mellon, before she became Mrs. Bruce, was "official" hostess for her father—and took her place at the foot of the table at dinners.

Well, did Charlie raise hell? He wasn't going to let some red-taper of an under secretary put expert Dolly into fifth-rate ranking. No, sir. Charlie took the ruling and, first calling the newspapermen into his office, laid it in the lap of Kellogg's successor, thus bedevilling poor, well-meaning Henry L. Stimson, who, when he saw the gist of Curtis' letter demanding a reversal of the ruling, promptly beat it for the State Department's cyclone cellar.

• • •

AFTER meditating a bit Stimson pulled the coup that justified Hoover's appointment of him as our first diplomat—he passed the buck to the ambassadors themselves. The beribboned diplomats, out-smarted, took counsel, tossed in the sponge, and "graciously" consented to defer their dinner positions to the Vice President's half-sister as his official hostess.

Thus Dolly actually won her triumph by default. But triumph it was, and when the Chilean Ambassador Davila gave his dinner at the Pan-American Union, April 11, 1929, Dolly proceeded to her place on his arm—and did Alice Longworth burn!

Alice declared in favor of Nicholas for preference on the grounds that as the Speaker of the House was the direct representative of the people he should join up at functions with the executive arm in that role. It was a bit of politico-sociologic reasoning, strange for Alice, that didn't get her anywhere. Since then they—Dolly and Alice—are supposed to have buried the hatchet.

Now this, the social story of Mrs. Edward Everett Gann that amused two continents, wasn't, as you see, the result of snooping newspapermen, but the statement for publication of the Vice President himself; a Vice Presidential half-brother with a long memory. True, it was the tea-cup titter of two continents.

But bless you, the world ain't done right by our Dolly.

Carnation Leads to Arrest Of Hotel Bandit Suspect

By The United Press

CHICAGO—A dapper young man arrested while parading a theater lobby with a carnation conspicuous in the lapel of his coat, admitted last night, detectives announced, that he was a bandit guilty of staging numerous hotel holdups here.

In addition, detectives said, the suspect identified himself as George Edward Dillon, who was arrested five years ago after his father, Dr. William A. Dillon, had been found murdered on the Washington University campus at St. Louis.

Dillon, who said he was 23 years old, was released last August from Elmira, N. Y., Reformatory, police said.

He had been working by day here as a gasoline station attendant and as a bandit at night, police said. One of his victims, Albert Baker, an insurance broker, who had lost only 90 cents in a holdup, identified Dillon at a theater Saturday night. Baker was attracted by the carnation.

He called police, who took Dillon aside and asked his identity.

"Why, what do you mean?" Dillon asked the officers. "You can't arrest me. I'm a graduate of Yale University. My father's a millionaire."

Dillon's attractive girl companion told the officers that she was attending a convent and in Chicago for the week-end. She said she had met Dillon at a fraternity dance in Evanston in November. He told her, she said, that he lived at the Blackstone Hotel.

At Baker's insistence, police took the youthful "college man" to the detective bureau, although feeling they were doing him an injustice.

Yesterday, however, Dillon readily was picked out by victims as the bandit of four recent hotel robberies. There have been 50 such robberies since Christmas, police said, and other victims will be called to view Dillon.

TRAFFIC DANGERS WILL BE DISCUSSED

Castle Shannon Residents Will Hold Meeting Tonight

Traffic dangers, especially to school children, will be discussed tonight by Castle Shannon residents in a meeting in Pittsburgh Railways Auditorium, Railroad Street and Castle Shannon Boulevard.

The meeting is being sponsored by Castle Shannon Post of the American Legion. A highway safety committee and junior safety council patrols in the school will probably be planned, Post Commander George C. Dietrich said yesterday.

Judge W. H. McNaugher, representing the American Legion; John M. Rice of the Pittsburgh Motor Club, and George E. Clarkson of the Western Pennsylvania Safety Council, will be among the speakers.

SMALLEST AUTO

15 H. P., Two-Cylinder Car Creates Sensation at Berlin Show

By The United Press

BERLIN—A 15-horsepower, 2-cylinder automobile—said to be the smallest yet produced—was one of the sensations at the Berlin Automobile exhibition yesterday, and German manufacturers already are thinking of invading the American market with it.

The car is more diminutive than the Austin and stands a little over four feet high. Its makers claim it can do 60 miles to a gallon of gasoline and are particularly enthusiastic about the cabriolet model, which has a rumble seat.

THIRD HURRICANE HITS FIJI ISLANDS

Latest Storm Reported to Be Sweeping Largest in Group

By The United Press

SUVA, Fiji Islands—The third hurricane within 12 days was devastating the north and east coasts of Viti Levu today, which is the largest of the Fiji group.

Since the storms started less than two weeks ago more than 100 inches of rain have fallen in the hills, causing repeated floods.

The death toll has mounted above 100 and property damage has been large.

Details of the third hurricane, except that it was as severe as those that preceded it, were lacking here.

URGES ANNULMENT OF 'JOKE' MARRIAGE

Pastor Advises Parents to Act in Runaway Weddings

"Annul joke marriages at once," Rev. W. W. Woodfin advised parents at Squirrel Hill Community services in Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church last night.

"Of every six runaway marriages to Gretna Greens, four end in disaster," he said.

"If young people treat such elopements as jokes, let parents do the same. Have them annuled."

Rev. Woodfin is pastor of the Third United Presbyterian Church. He spoke on "Shall the Church Recognize Divorce?"

He upheld birth control and urged mental and physical examinations as a requirement for marriage.

JUSTICE OF SUPREME COURT OF STATE DIES

Pneumonia Attack Fatal to Judge Sadler

By The United Press

CARLISLE, Pa.—Arrangements were completed today for the funeral of Sylvester B. Sadler, 55, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, who died at his home here following attack of pneumonia.

Judge Sadler

The funeral will be held Wednesday afternoon from the family estate, "Thornewold." His colleagues of the State Supreme Court will be honorable pallbearers.

Justice Sadler became ill a month ago while sitting with the court at Philadelphia. Pneumonia developed and after apparently recovering he suffered a relapse which caused his death yesterday.

He entered the Supreme Court in January, 1921, after serving for seven years as president judge of Cumberland County courts, in which post he had succeeded his father, the late Judge Wilbur F. Sadler, Sr., co-founder with Dean William Trickett of the Dickinson College School of Law.

Justice Sadler was graduated from Yale University with Phi Beta Kappa honors and from Dickinson Law School, in which he taught criminal law for years. He was author of several textbooks on criminal law procedure and has a library of limited editions of history and biography valued at $100,000.

He was serving as president of the board of trustees of the law school at the time of his death.

Auto Victim Out Of Hospital Brief Time

Jacob Guzel, 40, is a persistent person.

Walking near his home in Coulter Road, Versailles Township, last evening, Jake was struck by an auto, taken to McKeesport Hospital, and sent home when no injuries were found.

Walking near his home again early today, Jake was struck by another auto, this one driven by a hit-and-run driver, taken to McKeesport Hospital, and kept there, suffering a broken leg and severe bruises.

Seize $200,000 Pre-War Liquor In Home

By The United Press

PHILADELPHIA—Police confiscated $200,000 worth of supposed pre-war wines and liquors yesterday in a raid on the home of Daniel Dever, 80, retired millionaire liquor merchant.

The liquor was his private stock, Dever declared, and he announced his intention of demanding return of every drop through court proceedings. Dever was arrested and released soon afterward in $1,500 bail.

The seizure included 70 barrels of old port and burgundy wines and Scotch, rye and Bourbon whiskies. Also included were about 1,500 bottles of stamped vintages.

The liquor was found in a specially constructed wine cellar under Dever's mansion.

While the police were taking the liquor out for storage in a warehouse, Dever had a gauger and checker on duty who measured and counted every container carefully.

RADIO MEN DISCUSS BROADCASTING PLAN

Business Problems Topic of Convention in Wilkinsburg

Business problems incidental to broadcasting of radio programs were discussed today at a meeting of commercial representatives of the Westinghouse Broadcasting stations in the Penn-Lincoln Hotel, Wilkinsburg.

The meeting opened yesterday with an inspection tour of the new KDKA transmitting station at Saxonburg.

Lloyd C. Thomas presided at today's meeting. Among those attending the meeting were: Milton Stoughton, Springfield; Harold C. Higgens and Norman E. Whittaker, Boston; Oliver Morton, Chicago; F. E. Spencer, Jr., New York, and Alexander L. Sherwood, Walter G. Horn, Stanley L. Spencer and W. E. Jackson of Station KDKA.

HILL RITES HELD

Services for Late Philantropist Conducted in Seattle

By The United Press

SEATTLE—Funeral services for Samuel Hill, 74-year-old philanthropist, railroad head and good roads enthusiast, were conducted here yesterday, with members of the family and friends in attendance.

Pioneers of the good roads movement, of which Hill was the motivating force, acted as pall bearers.

Funeral services were followed by cremation, and the ashes were then sent to Hill's Maryhill, Wash., estate, where they will be interred.

THUGS FOOL POLICE LOOT RESTAURANT

False Calls Draw Officers Away From Scene

Bandits telephoned false calls to draw out available East End police early yesterday before holding up Sofis' restaurant in the 5900 block of Penn Avenue, a square from the station and fled with $300.

An emergency accident call sent a squad of officers to Penn Avenue and Beechwood Boulevard 10 minutes before the robbery. Five minutes later a second call sent more officers to a "riot" in Spahr Street. Both calls proved bogus.

Other week-end holdups included:

O. K. Grocery, 200 block Forty-sixth Street, $56.

J. B. Jordan, caterer, 200 block North Craig Street, till emptied.

City Service Station, Hamilton and Dallas Avenues, $20.

City Service Station, 3500 block East Street, $50.

Vellis restaurant, 600 block East Ohio Street, $15.

PLAN $350,000 FUND FOR IDLE GIRLS IN N. Y.

Campaign to Provide Jobs for Unemployed Women Is Started

By The United Press

NEW YORK—A campaign to raise $350,000 to provide jobs for 45,000 unemployed single women and girls in the city was started yesterday by the women's fund committee, of which Mrs. August Belmont is chairman.

It is planned to have the emergency employment committee, of which Seward Prosser is chairman, direct the creating of such jobs, which will be sought in social agencies, hospitals and similar non-profit-making institutions. The fund contemplated would provide about 1,000 emergency jobs at $18 a week for six months.

TRIES TO KISS WIFE, ARRESTED AND FREED

Woman Says She Gave Mate Freedom, and Now He Wants Reunion

Trying to kiss his estranged wife led to the arrest of George Rakich of Aliquippa on a disorderly conduct charge.

The wife, Mrs. Julia Rakich, South Side, had her husband arrested when he visited her yesterday and asked to kiss her and make up their troubles.

"He wanted his freedom two years ago and I gave it to him," the wife said. "Now he can't expect a welcome when he tries to visit me."

The husband was dismissed in Morals Court by Magistrate Jones.

DEAD PRELATE ONCE WORKER IN MILLS HERE

Bishop Garland, State Episcopal Head, Brother of City Councilman

FIRST PASTORATE WAS AT ST. PETER'S

Dies of Pneumonia at Home in Philadelphia at Age of 65

Civic and religious leaders of the state today mourned the death of Bishop Thomas James Garland, 65, of Philadelphia, head of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania, and a brother of Councilman Robert Garland of Pittsburgh.

Bishop Garland

Bishop Garland died yesterday of pneumonia, which developed last week from a cold.

When Bishop Garland came to America in his youth he became associated with the Oliver Iron & Steel Company here at the age of 21. When he later changed his plans, he was ordained for the ministry of his church in Pittsburgh and his first charge was St. Peter's here.

Born in Ireland

The late prelate was born in Belfast, Ireland, was educated in St. Bees College, England, and was examined for holy orders at Oxford and at Cambridge.

Following these studies he embarked on an industrial career in Pittsburgh.

In 1890, however, he returned to ecclesiastical studies, enrolling in the Philadelphia Divinity School. His ordination came a year later.

In the next 12 years he served as rector of St. Peter's Church here, All Saints at Johnstown, Trinity Church at Coatesville, and parishes at Loraine, O., and Bristol, Pa.

Becomes Bishop

In 1903 he became secretary to the late Bishop Whittaker. He continued as secretary to Bishop Mackey-Smith after Bishop Whittaker's death in 1911. In the same year, however, he was named Bishop Suffragan with special charge of rural work.

He served in that office until 1924, when he became head of the diocese of Pennsylvania.

His brother, the councilman, and his widow survive.

1,400 LAWYERS VOTE ON EXTRA-JUDGE BILL

Mail Referendum Gets Sentiment Ballots

More than 1,400 of the 1,712 members of the County Bar Association have cast ballots by mail in a referendum conducted by a voluntary committee on sentiment regarding a bill before Legislature to add two judges to the County Common Pleas bench.

Balloting ended today and Oscar Emrich, law librarian, was to supervise counting of the poll.

Opposition to the bill was voiced by the association at a meeting attended by less than 100 members. The vote was 57 to 29. The unofficial poll resulted.

A hearing on the bill is scheduled tomorrow at Harrisburg.

POLICEMAN SAVES MONOXIDE VICTIM

Finds Sharpsburg Man Overcome in Garage, Takes Him to Hospital

Quick action on the part of Sharpsburg police saved the life of William Schwartz, 50, of 1900 Middle Street, Sharpsburg, early today, after he had been found unconscious from carbon monoxide gas.

Motorcycle Patrolman Chester Zygello was riding his machine in Main Street. At Twenty-second Street, he noticed a light burning in Schwartz's garage.

Zygello saw Schwartz lying on the front seat of his auto, found him unconscious and took him to St. Francis Hospital, where he was revived with the aid of an inhalator.

FORMER INSURGENT MINE LEADER SLAIN

Man Shot and Killed by Gunmen as He Enters Home

By The United Press

PITTSTON, Pa.—Samuel Licata, 35, former insurgent miners' leader, was killed by three men as he was about to enter his home here early today.

Police said Licata had left a pool room and was on his way home when three men stepped from a parked auto and opened fire at him.

Two suspects were arrested and held pending investigation.

Rooms, Too, Are Quickly Rented
